THE MEMORIES OF THOSE 20 DAYS in Edsa became as vivid today as it did 23 years ago.

That week in February 1986 had been checked with events.

On Feb. 11, opposition leader and former Ateneo Gov. Emilio Javier was brutally assaulted in the plaza of his Ave. Arroyo, while guarding the votes of Corason Aquino in the snap presidential election. Chopped in his head was a blood-soaked crown.

His remains were sent by huge throngs to Manila. At his wake in the Basilican Church, many European ambassadors showed up. On the way to Ateneo de Manila University, where the remains would be in state, crowds swept in the streets, a tribute to Ninoy's honor of 2 with a half-power

GMA must explain, says Senate report

By Christine G. Arendato

DESCRIBING THEM AS A "PACK OF WOLVES," the Senate blue ribbon committee has recommended the filing of plunder and other criminal charges against former Agriculture Undersecretary Jocelyn "Joc-joc" Bolante and nine others for involvement in the P728-million fertilizer fund scam.

Although it did not find any evidence directly linking President Macapagal-Arroyo to the scam, the committee held her responsible for the acts of Bolante and the others involved in the alleged scam.

"The President must explain," Sen. Richard Gordon, chair of the blue ribbon committee, told reporters after presenting to the media a summary of the committee's report on its probe of the scam that jeopardized the use of fertilizer in money intended for farmers in Iloilo, Zamboanga and other provinces of the Arroyo, who was then standing for president during the 2004 elections.

Gordon said the Arroyo was responsible for appointing Bolante and other government officials but she did not do anything about their involvement in the scam, and even appointed them to new government positions.

In its report, the committee said "no evidence" was found directly linking Ms. Arroyo to

Thousands of jobless go to DPWH job fairs

By Kristine L. Alano, Delfin T. Mallari Jr. and Vincent Calabaz

"THIS IS NOT THE TIME TO BE GREY," said Jolly Gonzales, who lost his job as a call center agent after his employer cut its work force.

Gonzales was one of the thousands of unemployed who were yesterday at the main office of the Department of Public Works and Highways (DPWH) in Manila to find work from contractors gearing up for the Arroyo administration's pump-priming projects.

The DPWH also held job fairs in other parts of the country.

"I used to work for a call center in Ortigas with the nice remote therapy, very much client pulled me and the company had to lay off some employees. I was one of them," said Gonzales, breadwinner of his family.

According to Design Director Martin Sharp, "Theater is an important part of the life of the city. However, the public sector can never afford theaters, which are largely lost to the market, pre-occupied with the labor market and other issues. For this reason, we are not in a position to build theaters, but we can build a place where people have access to the arts and where they can be involved in the process of building the city."

Abstract

Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory (LLNL) researchers have found a way to convert a common waste metal into a valuable material. The researchers, led by LLNL's David J. Worsfold, have developed a process to convert waste metal into a valuable material. The process involves the use of a catalyst to convert waste metal into a valuable material. The catalyst is made of a common waste metal, and the process is simple and efficient. The researchers have found that the process can be used to convert a wide range of waste metals into valuable materials. This could have significant implications for the recycling industry, as it would allow for the conversion of waste into a valuable resource. The researchers are currently working on optimizing the process and scaling it up for industrial use.
